No need to wait for office hours or assignments to be graded to find out where you took a wrong turn. Alain Touraine described the great rupture of modernity, counterposing the intellectual program of Humanism-Erasmism with the rationalism and empiricism associated with the scientific appropriation of natural reality. Stephen Toulmin, in turn, questioned the idea that the one true modernity came from a single origin which owed its existence to the rationalization of philosophical and scientific thought that had begun with Descartes and Bacon. For Toulmin, the inherited vision of the origins of modernity should be rejected once and for all, offering the possibility of a double origin for the modern period.
